

WHOLE SCHOOL

The importance of engagement and enjoyment is explicit within the whole-school writing policy. The importance of an engaging, purposeful and experiential writing curriculum is evidenced in policy and its rationale communicated to all stakeholders.

Pupils' writing, both formal and informal, is displayed and celebrated publicly, for example on notice boards and pupil-voice boards, and in school council notes. A range of writing from across the curriculum (fiction and non-fiction) is displayed and school and class assemblies are used to celebrate.

Pupils have regular opportunities to write for a real purpose and audience within the school community, for example contributing to school communications, emails, website content, signage, school council messages, governor enquiries, events advertising and invitation, and questionnaires.

Pupils have opportunities to produce publications for the local community, for example a local history guide, information leaflets for local charities, businesses and groups and book recommendations for the local library.

All stakeholders within the school and wider community are encouraged to model and discuss their daily writing habits, from kitchen staff to parents and governors – both personal and work-related writing.

Parents are encouraged to participate in writing events and competitions alongside pupils. Parents have opportunities to attend after-school writing clubs and workshops.

Research and knowledge of barriers to writing for specific groups of pupils (e.g. boys) are used to explore and identify priorities for targeted focus and whole-school improvement.

Pupils are encouraged to explore writing in a range of different spaces across the whole school; outdoor writing areas, interactive word walls, graffiti walls, poetry corners, library zones.

A regular school newspaper, radio station or blog is established and run by the pupils to encourage writing for purpose in a real context and improve whole-school communication.

All stakeholders have awareness and knowledge of the impact of enjoyment on pupils' writing attitudes and attainment.

Research on the importance of writing enjoyment is disseminated and explored through staff development and governor/parental updates.

Regular visits from authors are organised to motivate pupils and to provide a focus for events to explore and celebrate writing for all stakeholders.

STAFF

Teachers as writers: teachers model and discuss their own writing habits and attitudes. Teachers share successes and preferences in writing styles and model use of writing journals.

The classroom environment and working walls demonstrate and celebrate all forms of writing; formal, informal, multi-modal and digital.

Teachers keep up to date with national and local writing competitions and integrate these opportunities for motivating young writers into the curriculum.

The school hosts a writers group for staff and achievements are shared with other staff and pupils.

Teachers have a commitment to ensuring all pupils see themselves as writers, despite their level of competency in terms of transcription, and demonstrate enthusiasm for the creative process of the communication of ideas – the heart of the writing process.

PUPILS

Pupils host their own writing groups both in and out of school, in person or via a virtual forum.

Surveys and reflection activities are used to explore pupils' attitudes and writing behaviours.

Pupils are encouraged to write for personal pleasure in a range of different forms; writing journals, diaries, online blogs.

Pupils have opportunities via the internet to correspond with pupils in other school communities, both nationally and internationally; sharing poems, stories, information, etc.

Pupils share and encourage younger pupils in their writing journeys and preferences to inspire writing for pleasure.

Pupils design and create their own writing spaces throughout the school environment.
